PLAIN JOHN SMITH FROM TAXAS. Ho'Comes Rere, Pulto His Gun, and, Dura It. to Hanled In.

Six feet tall, plain John Smith was he from Ban Angelo, Tex. His face was bronzed, says where there was a light moustache. hands were big. He was wild-eyed, and there was an innocent expression on his face. Ho wore rough shoes, faded clothes, and a big broad-brimmed hat. He struck New York at midnight on Tuesday, and believed he was in Paradise-of which the Bowery was a partfor twenty-one hours, when he landed on the rebound in the Liberty street police station.

Plain John Smith was a farmer in San Angelo. He was tired of farm life, and decided to come to New York, not for green goods, he says, but to find work. In one pocket he carried some money; in another a gun. He had never seen New York before. He did not look for work at once. He spent the day roving, and saw the Bowery. When night came on he sought a lodging. About 8 o'clock he on he sought a lodging. About 8 o'clock he wandered into Cortlandt street. There the whiffs of Jersey air, of stock-parl odors reached him, and he plunged down the street. It was dark as he strode on. Suddenly there was a yell, a howl, John Smith thought of the Texas prairies, and gripped his gun. "Jizzy, git onte; 'im." he heard some one shout, But John dmith strode on. A cabbage by the ourb hysaw. A green cabbage it was, and it mads him think of the Texas farm. John Smith dreamed.

Whir!"

hard potato hurtled through the air.

green-headed carrot whistled by John Smith.

He dreamed no more. He pulled his gun and drawled: "I'll shoot ye." The hops relied, yus then Policeman Murray came up. John smith saved the price of his lodging, for he slept in the station house. At the Tombs John Smith took his place in the line, and was sent to the prison for carrying a concealed weapon because he couldn't get $100 bail.

Do they look you up in Texas for carrying a gun?" asked a reporter of John Smith.

"Naw, they don't," replied John Smith dejectedly.

jectedly. What do you think of it?"

"What do you think of it?"
"It's pesky mean."
"Do you think it unjust?"
"Yes, young feller, I do."
"What are you going to do about it?"
"I dunno."
"I dunno."
"You think it wrong, then, to be arrested for carrying a weapon?"
"It's an insult. It's onhuman. Why, we enery 'am all the time in Texas. We hev' to, Bere, I ve lived my life in Texas. come all the way North, an', durn it, ter be hauled in for carrying an iron! It's wrong, durn me if it ain't." ain't."

John Smith looked pensively through the iron-grated door; a sad look spread over his face; he was thinking of the Texas farm. A smile came as he spoke of his first day in New York. A grin fellowed as he remarked: "But say, New York is a big place, ain't it?"

FIVE JOVIAL SERVANT GIRLS. And the "Fun" They Had With Worthing. ton Ford's Maltese Cat.

The family of Worthington C. Ford, the millionaire author, who resides at 97 Clark street. Brooklyn, is spending the summer at the sea shore, and the brown-stone house is inhabited by five or six jolly servant girls and a Maltese cat of undoubted lung power.

Last evening the servants felt more jovial than usual and decided to make use of the cat. With only pure fun in view, the servants attached a long rope to ' e cat's claws, and then tying the rope to a channey, left the cat in exclusive possession of the roof.

The cat objected vigorously, and an elderly maiden who lives near by declared that its piteous cries would melt a stone heart. But they were not pathetic enough to touch the hearts of the jovial servant girls. The neighmeans of the jovini servant girls. The neighbors endured the nuisance as long as their patience lasted, and finally Mrs. Stanley, a next-door neighbor, appealed to the servants to liberate the cat.

The request was met with the injunction to "mind her own business." Other neighbors interceded with the servants in behalt of the wailing cat, but they were treated as was Mrs. Stanley.

wailing cat, but they were treated as was Mrs. Stanley.

Finally a policeman was called, but he favored the servant girls and flatly refused to order the cat taken from the roof, pleading lack of authority. Thus fortified, the servants started in to make night hideous in that aristocratic neighborhood. The cat was tortured until Dr. Ferdinand W. Ostrander, who lives at 95 Clark street, threatened to notify the Fords by wire of the treatment their pet was receiving. This had the desired effect unon the servants and, rejuctantly, the cut was taken down.

But the neighbors threaten to lay the matter before the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. The ladies of the neighborhood had vainly tried to gain admittance to the Ford roof through the artic of Dr. Ostrander's house, but the Ford mansion towers above the other houses, and the servants of the Fords permitted no strangers within their gates. The Fords have been notifled of the affair.

COMPLETITIVE ILLUMINATION.

An Artistic Show to be Made on the Eve

At the meeting of the School Committee of the Columbus Celebration yesterday in Secretary Wahle's office it was reported that 20,000 school children had volunteered to march in the parade. The committee resolved that no child under 12 years of age should be permitted to join the parade, and this line of march was selected: From Fifth avenue and Fourteenth street to Union square; around Union square to Seventeenth street and Fifth avesquare to Seventeenth street and Fifth avenue, and up Fifth avenue to Forty-fifth street. David S. Brown was elected Grand Marshal and J. Winfield Scott Chief of Staff.

The Art Committee met at the Players' Club and resolved to have the city illuminated on the night of Oct. 11. It is also proposed to raise an arch of flags in Fifth avenue, from Twenty-second to Twenty-sixth street. J. Armstrong Chanler, Luclus Allen, and William A. Coffin were appointed a committee to prepare a book, with illustrations and information for persons who desire to illuminate their houses. This book will be given away at the secretary's office in the Stewart Building. Twenty-four prizes in the shape of gold, silver, and bronze medals will be awarded for merit in decoration and illumination, and hotels, clubs, business houses, and private houses are eligible for the competition in different classes. The prizes will be awarded by a committee consisting of Richard M. Hunt, John Lalarge, and Augustus St. Gaudens.

Charles Naegell's design for a medal to commemorate the celebration met with approval, and J. Armstrong Chanler and Augustus St. Gaudens were appointed a committee to confer with the artist and suggest some changes. The Art Committee are considering a number of suggestions to make their part of the celebration a success.

Jumped at by a Man-eating Shark, nue, and up Fifth avenue to Forty-fifth street.

Jumped at by a Man-eating Shark. While the steamship Niagara, which arrived from Havana yesterday, was taking on cargo from a lighter in Cardenas Bay an acrobation shark, said to be a man-eater, attempted to get aboard the lighter and take a bite or two out aboard the lighter and take a bite or two out of Second Officer Smith and two seamen. At least that is what Mr. Smith says, with all the positiveness of a scafaring man. He and the two sallors were standing on the edge of the lighter when the shark, which was a monster leaped soven feet out of the water in their direction. The leaping of sharks is usually subaqueous, and Mr. Smith thinks that the man-anter did not make its aerial flight merely for a snoutful of sea breeze.

The house is occupied by several families. He was committed without bail. THREE LITTLE SHARKS.

They Sport About in Newark Bay and Spoil the Fishing.

Three small sharks have been seen sporting in Newark Pay several times during the last three weeks. They come in with the tide, and play around the long Central Railroad bridge.

Once or twice they have gone up toward Newark, but have returned with the falling tide. Their sharp dorsal fins stick out of the water

Their sharp dorsal fins stick out of the water and occasion great excitement among the Bergen Point boys, who fish off the bridge. Several times fishermen have fired revolvers at the sharks and frightened them.

The sharks are about eight or nine feet long, the fishermen say. They judge by the size of the fins, as no one has approached the sharks near enough to see their bodies. The fishermen say the sharks drive away the fish to this fact they attribute the poor sport of the last few weeks.

"Oh. res. I expect him then," she answered. Inspector Steers thinks President Roberts's confidential clerk will be disappointed. The two men will be arraigned for examination in Jefferson Market this morning. If Inspector Steers a witnesses are not on deck, however, the examination will be postponed.

Roberts is about 35 years old and married. He is said to be a native of Savannah. He came here from Marion, N. C., last April and established the Finance Trading Company the following month. He is credited with being a power in North Carolina, and secured a special act from its Legislature allowing him to establish a "banking and industrial company" in Marion. He is reputed to own 30,000 acros of unencumbered land in McDonald county, North Carolina, which is said to be worth from $5 to $10 an acre.
